Source: Martin Currie. The NAV basis used is cum-income in £. Please note prior to July 2017 the NAV basis used was ex-income NAV in £. Ex-income NAVs exclude current-year income, while cum-income NAVs include current-year income. These figures do not include the cost of buying and selling shares in an investment trust. If these were included, performance figures would be reduced.

MANAGERS' COMMENTARY

US software giant Microsoft was the top performer for the portfolio during April, on the back of strong third-quarter fiscal results driven by all of its businesses. Its cloud segment was the stand out contributor. This business, largely the reason we hold Microsoft, continues to grow its revenues convincingly, while at the same time expanding margins. Elsewhere, Air Products, which sells gases and chemicals for industrial uses, was once again a notable positive following a solid first quarter for the year, driven by good pricing across its businesses. Aerospace firm Lockheed Martin also fared well after a strong showing from the F-35 fighter jet programme in its first-quarter results.

On the other side, US petroleum company Occidental was the biggest drag on absolute returns, buffeted by the ructions from its ongoing battle with Chevron for ownership of Anadarko. Late in the month, however, Occidental appeared to secure additional financing for the deal from Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway. Pharmaceutical firm Merck also struggled during April, mainly on concerns about drug price reform and 'Medicare for All' proposals from Democratic lawmakers. UK energy supplier SSE was also down. There was no particular newsflow about the firm, but utilities was one of the weaker sectors in a rising market.

In terms of portfolio transactions, we sold Spanish financial CaixaBank. While the investment thesis is largely working, the IRPH issue (litigation on mis-selling mortgages) creates too great a tail risk to continue holding the stock. This is based on what we perceive to be a massive range of potentially negative outcomes, including a non-zero probability of a solvency/liquidity issue, and the length of time this overhang could persist for. In addition, following external advice, we also sold private equity multinational Blackstone as the UCITs eligibility status of our holding in the company is unclear. We sold put options in AIA – the Asian insurer is a high-quality business that has a huge opportunity in Asian markets in Life & Health insurance.1

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

This information is issued and approved by Martin Currie Investment Management Limited. It does not constitute investment advice. Market and currency movements may cause the capital value of shares, and the income from them, to fall as well as rise and you may get back less than you invested. Please note that, as the shares in investment trusts are traded on a stockmarket, the share price will fluctuate in accordance with supply and demand and may not reflect the value of underlying net asset value of the shares.

Depending on market conditions and market sentiment, the spread between purchase and sale price can be wide. As with all stock exchange investments the value of investment trust share purchases will immediately fall by the difference between the buying and selling prices, the bid-offer spread. The value of investments and the income from them may go down as well as up and is not guaranteed. An investor may not get back the amount originally invested.

Investment trusts may borrow money in order to make further investments. This is known as 'gearing' and can enhance shareholder returns in rising markets but, conversely, can reduce them in falling markets.

The majority of charges will be deducted from the capital of the Company. This will constrain capital growth of the Company in order to maintain the income streams.

The company employs an active but tactical options strategy by using derivatives, predominantly writing (selling) puts and covered calls for investment purposes, this being principally to generate income. This may be at the expense of generating capital gains.

A sold put option obligates an investor to take delivery, or purchase of shares, of the underlying stock at a specified price within a specified time in return for receiving the payment of a premium.

Any use of derivatives for efficient portfolio management and options for investment purposes will be made on the basis of the same principals of risk spreading and diversification that apply to the company's direct investments.
